Mental Health and Well-being in Schools - teacher notes

For the teacher educator. The guide places Chapter 11 in Week 16, shared with Chapter 12 and the course review - the combined closing week. Two topics, one session each, with Chapter 12 taking the third session.

SENSITIVITY RULES (read before teaching)

This unit names hopelessness, self-harm and disclosure. Before teaching it:

1. Announce the content at the start of the session. Trainees may have lived experience; the announcement costs nothing and gives them the choice of seat, of silence, of a word with you afterwards.
2. No personal disclosure required. The activities use anonymised pupils from practicum or memory - never "tell us about yourself". If a trainee discloses in class, follow the unit's own referral discipline: listen, do not promise secrecy, escalate to the institution's designated person.
3. Teach the signs as professional knowledge, not as gossip or drama. The naming is precise because precision is protective; vagueness and horror-stories are both failures of the same discipline.
4. Know your institution's referral route before the session. The unit's referral line should land on a real named route in the trainees' own college - teach it with the real name.

Teaching strategies

The guide names lectures, interactive discussion, question-answer, demonstration and case study analysis. This unit runs on two paired cases and one walk.

Open with the two Class 8 pupils. The brilliant pupil with dread and the steady pupil with middling marks are the unit in miniature: every definition, sign and move lands on them. Ask which pupil the staff room worries about, and why the answer is wrong.

Run the tutor's four minutes as a rehearsal. The walk to the head teacher with the sentence written down is the unit's professional centre. Rehearse it literally: what the paper says, what the pupil is told, what the head teacher hears. The rehearsal is the demonstration the guide asks for.

Set the walk of the timetable before the second session (the practical work, below), so the station audit runs on the trainees' own data.

Sequencing across the week

Session	Focus	Leave time for
First session (Ch 11)	Topic 11.1 - the definition, the balance, the signs	the balance-of-one-pupil activity
Second session (Ch 11)	Topic 11.2 - the stations, the role, the referral	the walk of the timetable; the four-minute rehearsal
Third session (Ch 12)	Unit 12's topics	see Unit 12's notes

If a session is lost, cut the station detail before the referral line. The referral discipline is the unit's most consequential content; the stations can be re-derived from the balance.

Misconceptions to expect, and how to handle them

"Mental health means mental illness." The WHO definition, read slowly, does the work: a state of functioning, not a diagnosis. The two-pupils case grounds it.

"It is not a school's business." The course's own history is the reply: the frightened pupil who cannot risk (Unit 8), the anxious one with no workbench (Unit 4) - well-being has been the condition every unit assumed. What is not the school's business is diagnosis and therapy, and that boundary is the unit's content, not its exclusion.

"Referring is giving up." Meet it with the twice-over protection and the continuation: the greeting, the routine and the quiet question matter MORE after a referral than before it.

"I can handle it myself." Usually said warmly. Ask what happens to the pupil if the teacher is wrong, or absent, or simply not a therapist - the boundary protects the pupil from the teacher's best intentions.

Language and access

The unit's key terms are banked where banked (ذهنی صحت، فلاح و بہبود، اضطراب، (دباؤ). The demands-and-supports vocabulary and the three-part role (notice, respond, refer) belong on the board in both languages for both sessions. The referral line should be learnable verbatim.

Practical work

The guide's practical component for this chapter is a group assignment: each group walks one school's day, station by station, and produces the one-page well-being audit: stations, demands, supports, the watch-list method, and the referral route with its designated person by role.

Set the walk before the second session; run the reporting in it. The audits are pooled into a single template the cohort takes away - the artefact behind ERQ 5, and the most portable page this course produces.

Assessment notes

The unit's formative work sits in the two topics' Check your understanding blocks (ten items across the unit, above the five-to-eight floor). The unit-assessment page carries the graded bank with worked responses and rubrics in its final bounded section.

ERQ 5 is the capstone and integrates both topics; schedule it after the practical work so the audit has a real school behind it. ERQ 4 (the confidence) rewards the boundary analysis the second session rehearses, and works well as the week's written homework - with the sensitivity rules in mind when returning it.
